

MOKENA VILLAGE TREASURER DIES

ERWIN MCGOVNEY
SUCCUMBS AFTER
MAJOR OPERATION

The Mokena territory was greatly shocked and grieved at the news of the death of Erwin W. McGovney, who passed away Wednesday in Silver Cross hospital in Joliet, following a major operation which he underwent last Friday. Erwin had shown signs of improving when he suddenly took a turn for the worse and by noon of the same day, he passed away.

Erwin McGovney was the son of Amanda and the late Ona E. McGovney and was born in Mokena June 30, 1917. He was graduated from the Mokena high school in 1933 and from the Joliet Township high school in 1935. He attended the Joliet Junior College from which he was graduated in 1937. He also attended the University of Illinois and was a member of the Sigma Phi Epsilon fraternity.

Upon the death of his father, the late Ona E. McGovney, last August, he took over the Insurance and Real Estate business of his father, which he had carried on very successfully. He was also appointed village treasurer to fill the unexpired term of his father.

During his entire school years, Mr. McGovney was active in all athletics and in all community affairs. He was an outstanding young man, of good character and showed promise for a successful future. He had a host of friends and will be greatly missed by all those in the community.

Erwin is survived by his mother, Amanda S. McGovney; one sister, Elmira and one brother, O. Elsworth all of Mokena.

Funeral services will be held this Saturday at two o'clock from the late home in Mokena to St. John's Evangelical Church at 2:30. Interment will be made in the Marshall cemetery west of Mokena.

New Lenox
Band Wins
In Contest

The New Lenox Grade School band under the direction of R. B. Wight and the Grade All Girls chorus, won first division ratings in Joliet last Saturday at the District and, Orchestra and Chorus contest.

Winners of First Division ratings are now eligible for the State competition which will be held April 27, 28, and 29th at La Salle. Both organizations won high ratings of straight A and A plus and are looking forward with enthusiasm toward the State contest.

The Chorus with an enrollment of twenty, is under the direction of Miss Smith, 5th and 6th grade teacher. She has received much praise for her work with the group.

The Band entered strictly as a Grade Band and while this organization has 60 members, only 45 players were used, the rest being New Lenox players who have worked their way to positions in the Famous Joliet high school band, and could not be used in grade competition.

Mr. Wight will be remembered, as having organized Frankfort, Mokena and Tinley Park bands a few years ago, and at the present has the Manhattan, Elwood and Plano grade school bands, also the Plano High School Band and orchestra.

On Tuesday of this week, the Band sponsored a tag day to raise funds for the LaSalle trip, and the Band wishes to thank everyone for their cooperation.

The band and chorus are fast making a name for New Lenox as a school of outstanding musical ability and hope to bring a championship home this year.

Tinley Mother And Child Killed By Fast Train

Mrs. Ethel Hardy and her seven year old daughter, were instantly killed Thursday afternoon about four o'clock when the car they were riding in, became stalled on the Oak Park avenue crossing of the Rock Island railroad in Tinley Park, and was struck by a west bound fast mail train. The car was wedged against the engine pilot and was carried for nearly three quarters of a mile before the train could be stopped. The bodies of the victims were quite badly mangled.

The car was being driven by Mrs. Broom, a resident of the south Elmore subdivision in Tinley Park. She jumped out of the stalled car and saved herself.

The Hardy family also have been resident of the south Elmore subdivision for about a year. Mr. Hardy is in the employ of the Morgan Sash and Door Company in Chicago.

NOTICE

Dear Neighbors:

To make my position clear in my candidacy for school director of Mokena, I wish to state that I am not in favor of eliminating our local high school. I am in favor of improving it as much as possible with our limited means.

Also I am not in favor of increasing school taxes. I am just as interested in keeping expenses down as anyone else. Only the voters of Mokena can determine whether they wish to keep a high school or not and whether they want to pay more taxes or not, not the directors of the school.

New Lenox
Supervisor was Re-elected Tuesday

Tuesday's election was the grand finale of political aspirations in New Lenox Township. The sun came out in all its glory of a perfect day. Farmers left their fields to do their political bit, to help elect the man of their choice, and swarmed to the polls from shortly after opening and continuing incessantly till close to closing time. Never before, has such turmoil, egotistic emotion and jealousy invaded the quiet little village. This has become prevalent more or less, since the migration of Chicago overflow in the community. Now that election is over, the best man is out of the pot, the pot finished boiling, and the fire burned down, all antagonism will be forgotten, and all will be ready to join in the love feast that usually follows, after a trivial battle of jealousy and bitterness. It is very evident and almost true to tradition, that when an independent or dark horse comes up unexpectedly, after a candidate has been chosen in a primary, usually is a subject for defeat.

GOLDEN EVENT

Mr. and Mrs. B. A. Zechlin of Frankfort observed their golden wedding anniversary by keeping open house at their home in Frankfort on Thursday afternoon and evening. Many friends and relatives called to pay their respects and extend best wishes to the honored couple.

B. A. Zechlin was united in marriage with Miss Ella Redlin in Chicago, April 6, 1889. About 32 years ago they came to Frankfort where Mr. Zechlin engaged in the furniture store and undertaking business in the former George Weimann place and has been actively engaged in this business ever since. Before locating in Frankfort, Mr. Zechlin was employed in the Mandel Bros. Store in Chicago in the upholstering department.

Mr. and Mrs. Zechlin have four daughters, Mrs. Walter Baumgartner, Mrs. Henry Geuther, Jr., Frankfort; Mrs. Wm. Baumgartner of Homewood; Mrs. Orville Pyle, Frankfort; and one son, Alfred of Frankfort. They also have seven grandchildren and one great grand child. Mrs. Zechlin has one sister, Mrs. Gertrude Eichmeier of Frankfort. Mr. Zechlin also has two brothers and one sister residing in Chicago.

The Wild Life
Corner

You often hear the old timers tell of the abundance of game in Illinois a few years back, stores of quail, prairie chickens, woodcock, ducks and geese and other game. What has become of this abundance of wildlife? The increase in predation, the drying up of sloughs the cutting of timber as well as the increase in the number of hunters have all had their effect on the decrease in the amount of game. Nature has been unable to replace this game by her own methods and it has been necessary for man to help her.

Fortunately there were those with foresight enough to see this and proceed to help nature along before our wild life became extinct the migrations of ducks and geese were getting smaller each year until a few years ago the Canadian government agreed to stop draining their sloughs, the natural breeding grounds of waterfowl, if the United States would cooperate with them. By shortening the hunting season, reducing the bag limit and making other stringent laws we have seen a small but steady increase in our wildfowl migrations.

Some of you may remember the millions of wild pigeons, or passenger pigeons as they were known, that we used to have throughout our country. They were so thick they blackened the sky when in flight. They were needlessly slaughtered until suddenly they completely disappeared. We did not think much of them until they were gone. A few years ago the Congress of the United States offered ten thousand dollars for a single pair of passenger pigeons, but to date none have been found, which is almost definite proof that we will never see them again. This is one of the major wildlife tragedies of our country. The sportsmen's group are endeavoring to avoid a repetition of this with the wildlife we have left and their good work deserves the support of all of us. Let's take care of the wildlife we have before it too is gone forever.

CARD OF THANKS

I wish to express my sincere thanks to my many friends and voters who supported me at Tuesday's election. Also extend best wishes to Mr. Emil Cappel.

New Lenox Tax

Book Audit

The annual New Lenox township meeting held in the Colonial hall on Tuesday afternoon was the hottest town meeting ever staged in the history of this township. About 130 voters were present to hear the annual reports read. James Sherwood, justice of the peace served as moderator of this meeting. At the close of the reading of the reports Harvey Johnson of New Lenox read a resolution asking about $800 be appropriated for the purposes of having public certified accountants audit the township books for a period of 14 years. The resolution further named the committee consisting of Ed McLaughlin, C. H. M. Smith Wells Holt to engage the certified public accountant to audit the books in question.

It was also asked that the town books be placed in the hands of such auditors by April 7. After the resolution had been read Mr. Johnson made a motion that it be adopted, Clyde Jones seconded this motion but the moderator refused to entertain the motion. This set off the fireworks and for the next 2 hours many hot verbal clashes and heated arguments filled the air. Those defending an audit of the township books stood pat for the resolution and after a two hour battle the resolution was finally accepted then the matter was put to a vote of those present which resulted in 67 yeas and 37 nays voted. It is understood that the township books will be released to the public accountant to be chosen by the committee named for an audit.

Famed Red Heads
Defeated by
All Star Team

The famed "Red Heads" girls' basketball team, came up from the southwest last Sunday to play the boys, "All Star" team, marking the first basketball game to be played in the new Frankfort school gym.

The girls proved to be wonderful players and were expert in making long shots to the baskets from the center of the floor. They kept their team of five players throughout the entire four quarters, whereas the boys had to keep adding new players.

For awhile it looked as tho the Red Heads were really going to carry off the honors, but after the Tinley and Orland players were added in the final quarter, the tide turned, and the Red Heads were defeated with a score of 37 to 41.

The game brought out a full capacity house, the overflow crowd being seated on the stage.

With no time to lose, he swung off, clipped the four wires at the nearest post, then leading Kit ran to the next. Three sections of fence were cut and the wires on the ground before a spurt of flame flashed out of the black shadows ahead. Simultaneously a lone bullet whined past.

He straightened, and in the silence that followed the gun's crack, his voice burst sharply:

"Ranger here!"

A sudden rush of hoofs and a rattle of pistol fire all but drowned the answering shout. "To hell with the Ranger!"

After that guns crashed from everywhere. As he sprang to his horse and faced the opposite edge of woods, Jackson and his cowpunchers charged up behind him. Breck leaped Kit in with them and they swept across the bald dome. The woods turned red with stabs of flame. Involuntarily he dodged. Enough shots were being fired to wipe out the dozen men in a second, yet they rushed on. One horse fell; its rider limped back toward the fence.

At the forest's edge the two bands came together, and there real fighting began. Jackson, astride a tall gray horse, was suddenly engulfed between two forms. Breck wheeled Kit that way, and caught a blow from a knotted rope between his eyes. He struck up with his gun to ward off a second blow.

Nothing was plain in the darkness. Horses thudded together, drew apart. Lariats whirled. A loop caught one horse by the forefeet; he plunged headlong and a man's body turned twice in mid-air. Cowpunchers from each side were too closely packed to allow guns. Firing had ceased. There sounded only the swish of ropes, grunted curses, one voice shouting as if that mass could obey his command.

Then suddenly above all else rose a thunder of cattle on the run. They had poured past the break in the fence and now, in one wave, were sweeping across the bald dome. Breck caught sight of them through the open trees, spurred Kit from their path, and with other men, left the fight to dash from that unchecked rush.

One rider, racing at an angle in front of him, turned in his saddle and fired a last shot. The range was no more than twenty feet. Breck felt a slash of fire along his cheek, then knew the full fury of fighting blood. The figure entered a lane of trees. Breck followed at a run down the long mountain spur.

Over Kit's lowered head, as swift and regular as clock ticks, he shot, aiming a little to the left of the man, wanting a prisoner rather than a corpse. The automatic held ten shells in its clip. Until six were fired the figure ahead showed no signs of halting. At seven he wavered in his saddle. At nine he threw up his hands, bracing himself as his horse stopped with all feet dug into the earth.

Breck rode down beside him. The fellow turned, gaping with wonder. "For God's sake, what'er you shootin'? I counted 'em. Nine and still goin'!"

"There is one more and that's plenty," Breck answered. "Now you turn face front and keep your hands high."

He reached across, lifted the man's gun, then drove him upward to a point where they could climb back to open ground. The herd had spread out by now; he could hear calls, and voices answering from near the drift fence. Presently a fire guided him.

Jackson's tall gray horse came first into sight, then he recognized one of the cowpunchers and rode to where they were gathering. The old cattleman was sitting on a log, trousers rolled up from a bloody leg.

Breck ordered his prisoner to the ground and dismounted. Only six men were at the fire. "Ain't all here yet," said Jackson. "We're just waitin'. Likely some of us will have to go hunt pretty soon."

The little group stood in silence. One by one others rode in, reached the ground, questioned with their eyes but said nothing. Soon there were ten.

"Mac's yonder," the last arrival reported, pointing further along the fence. "Leg's broke."

"You, Fred," Jackson ordered, "take him a horse." He straightened from dressing his own wound and looked around the group. "Ten here. Mac makes eleven. Who's missin'?"

"Where's Johnny?" someone asked.

Before an answer could be given the distant crack of a gun broke through the night. Three shots came slowly, telling of deliberate aim.

Breck leaped to his horse, flinging back as he lunged away. "Hold that prisoner here!"

something horrible in the cool way of firing. He pictured the boy, ruthlessly shot down, lying somewhere in the canyon below.

But he could have saved himself the agony. Before he had gone far, Johnny came loping upward, gun alert as he questioned from a distance: "Ranger?"

"Yes. Are you all right, son?"

The boy approached. "No I ain't! Three shots just like that . . . and I missed him!"

Back at the fire, with all men accounted for and no signs of renewed attack, now that all the cattle were scattered over the mountain, Breck faced his prisoner.

"Whose outfit are you from?"

The fellow looked up suddenly. "Brown's of course."

"All right, you're going back to Brown and you're going to tell him that his line ends west of Black Mountain, at the creek. Tell him it's open season on any of his cattle storm. But if it's lightning we'll earn our money!"

That was Wednesday evening. As Breck stood at the telephone he glanced up to the unbroken heavens where stars hung like clear blue gems. Later he went out again and found that even since the time he had talked with Cook, something had formed up there. Black patches had appeared. A high broad arm covered the area south of Rock House.

He returned to his bunk and fell asleep with thoughts of an approaching storm, and dreamed endlessly of blazes and brush hooks and then a fire ball that swung over the forest. It descended lower and lower until it touched the pine tops. They burst into flame with a queer sound. Ringing.

Breck leaped from his bunk and walked while still half asleep. It was daylight outside. The telephone bell clamored beyond his door. He found this side of it. Understand? Now get out!"

When the Middle Forker had ridden away, quiet fell over the group, broken at last by Jackson's announcement: "Let's get along, boys. Soon we'll be too damn stiff to move."

It was a wordless line of men that rode down Black Mountain in the first light of dawn, and a weary lot by the time they reached Bear Trap. Still wordless, they threw off saddles and clumped into the cabin. But in a short time over cups of black coffee and thick slices of unbuttered bread, their spirits rose and talk began.

A cowhand turned to where Breck was sprawled on the floor with two others. "Well by God, Ranger, they done initiated you!"

Breck raised a hand to his grimy cheek, remembering that slash of fire. His fingers came away red with blood.

In time the cowpunchers finished their coffee and one by one went where they could lie down in the sun and sleep. Breck felt the same desire but knew he must get back to telephone connection with headquarters. When he rose, Jackson walked with him as far as the screened meat safe outside his door.

Halting, JG drew a chunk of beef from its hook. "Here," he said, wrapping it in a gunny sack, "take this and help yourself whenever you come through."

Though Breck had meat left from what Temple had given him, he took it gladly. Again it was the cow country's offering of good will.

The trip to Bear Trap was Breck's last ride away from Rock House Station for some time. Upon Cook's order he remained close to the telephone, for day by day the first week of July passed and then half the second, with no sign of rain to break the drouth that had settled over the Sierras. His grass meadow began to turn brown. Needles under the pine trees became tinder.

Three times each day he talked with the lookout on Kern Peak, making certain that the line was clear and getting Donny's report. Always it was the same. "Not a cloud. Humidity hasn't changed half a degree."

"Any smoke?" Breck would ask. That was the thing in mind these days. He began to see smoke in every patch of light, and once, sitting on a log near the telephone post, he caught a definite tinge of it in his nostrils and sprang up, ready to throw on his pack, then realized the odor came from his own stove.

When Cook called from headquarters they talked of nothing else. "Looks bad," the ranger said. "Dry as a match over here; same with you, I suppose. Things will be all right if we get rain in the next

CHAPTER XIV

The trip to Bear Trap was Breck's last ride away from Rock House Station for some time. Upon Cook's order he remained close to the telephone, for day by day the first week of July passed and then half the second, with no sign of rain to break the drouth that had settled over the Sierras. His grass meadow began to turn brown. Needles under the pine trees became tinder.

Three times each day he talked with the lookout on Kern Peak, making certain that the line was clear and getting Donny's report. Always it was the same. "Not a cloud. Humidity hasn't changed half a degree."

"Any smoke?" Breck would ask. That was the thing in mind these days. He began to see smoke in every patch of light, and once, sitting on a log near the telephone post, he caught a definite tinge of it in his nostrils and sprang up, ready to throw on his pack, then realized the odor came from his own stove.

When Cook called from headquarters they talked of nothing else. "Looks bad," the ranger said. "Dry as a match over here; same with you, I suppose. Things will be all right if we get rain in the next

CHAPTER XIV

The trip to Bear Trap was Breck's last ride away from Rock House Station for some time. Upon Cook's order he remained close to the telephone, for day by day the first week of July passed and then half the second, with no sign of rain to break the drouth that had settled over the Sierras. His grass meadow began to turn brown. Needles under the pine trees became tinder.

"What do you think of this fire?" Breck asked. "Lightning?"

"Maybe; though it's mighty close to the Potholes. Make up a crew from the nesters there. You'll find a tool box near Weller's place. I'll keep Donny on the line and if things don't look better by afternoon, Slim will come. Now hop onto it!"

The Potholes lay some twenty-five miles to the south and a little east of Breck's station; a country of steep ridges, connected by narrow ravines, and all occupying a hollow where the Sierra roof began to break into lower levels. Nesters had come there and settled, a man to a meadow, before the district was made a federal forest. Now government land surrounded them, yet they remained independent of the reserve.

This much Breck had learned from Cook when he first came on the job, along with the ranger's statement: "God knows what they live on! They don't graze cattle and they don't farm. They handle Tillson's bootleg some and get their thirty-five cents an hour fire-fighting. They'll bear a look any time you're in that part."

Leading his pack, Breck could make only four miles an hour along a trail that climbed and descended and climbed again. Long before he came within sight of the Potholes he saw a mushroom of smoke above that area. It grew steadily, black at first, showing the fire was in brush, then took on the gray of burning timber. When he topped a rise about eleven o'clock, and looked into the hollow country, the whole basin was obscured in a cloud.

The main blaze seemed further east of the Potholes, centered on the flank of a cone-shaped peak. Here an occasional curl of red flame burst up through the smoke. He turned in that direction, dipping downward in order to pass the nesters' settlement. It came into view hazily; half a dozen weathered buildings, store, blacksmith shop, a few houses scattered at the forest's edge.

A group of men loafed in front of the shop. Breck rode there at once, saying as he halted, "Is Weller here?"

It took no more than a glance to put them down as a shiftless lot. They wore overalls mostly, unwashed since the day they left the counter, ragged shirts, and stared with sullen indifference from bearded faces. He repeated, "Where is Weller?"

One jerked a thumb toward the smithy. Breck dismounted, left Kit tied to a hitching bar and strode to the smithy's door. Immediately he was confronted by a thin-bodied, thin-faced man who appeared out of the black interior. His eyes were small and close, and his nose seemed wrinkled in perpetual animosity.

"What do you want, Ranger?" It was a blunt demand.

Breck spoke with sudden anger. "Are you Weller?"

"I reckon."

"Then what's the matter with you nesters? Why aren't you on that fire?" Breck whirled from the door. "Come on now and get a crew!"

Weller followed at a slow pace. "Can't fight with no tools, mister."

"There's the box. Nothing to stop you," Breck waved a hand toward the service chest that stood under a tree not far off.

"Sure, there's a box," Weller agreed. "Help yourself."

Breck went to it and flung back the cover. Space inside was empty save for one shovel and a rusted brush-hook without a handle.

Cannibals Spurn White Man's Flesh; Rather Eat Relatives, Traveler Says

An ornithologist for the Philadelphia Academy of Natural Sciences says that a white man's life among Dutch New Guinea cannibals is generally uneventful because the cannibals prefer to eat their own relatives, relates a Philadelphia United Press correspondent in the Detroit Free Press.

The Philadelphia man recently returned from a year's stay among the Karoon cannibals of New Guinea. He said nothing rates higher gastronomically than a relative who oversteps the bounds of cannibal propriety.

"The system," he said, "results in a minimum of bores and love thieves in the tribe." Relative eating, he said, resulted in part from the Dutch government's attitude toward consumption of white men and Chinese.

Besides cannibal lore, he returned with 1,000 skins and 70 live birds and admitted he owed his success to the co-operation of cannibals.

He said the Karoons have "good features, brown skins and a certain amount of beauty among the young girls." But their minds, he said, are low and conniving.

"For instance, let's suppose a tribesman steals from a fellow tribesman his wife or some personal possession. The victim lodges a complaint with the chief and the chief calls a council of assistant chiefs and priests. If they decide the meat shortage is acute enough to warrant drastic punishment, the offender is invited to a big blowout.

"He doesn't know he is about to be barbecued. He dances with the rest of them and the only indication of unusual honor to be bestowed on him is a garland of flowers about his neck.

"When the dancing ends, the unfortunate is killed with specially selected poles and divided.

"The guests then roast him to individual taste."

King Alfred a Bible Student

King Alfred the Great was a translator of the Bible, for it was his ambition that "all the freeborn youth of his kingdom should employ themselves on nothing till they could first read well the English Scripture." King Alfred died while working on a translation of the Psalms. About that time, too, Archbishop Aelfric translated parts of the Bible into Anglo-Saxon.

PAUL PREACHES THE RISEN CHRIST

LESSON TEXT—Acts 13:16, 23-31, 38-39; I Corinthians 15:19-22.
GOLDEN TEXT—But now is Christ risen from the dead, and become the firstfruits of them that slept.—I Corinthians 15:20.

From time immemorial man has stood questioning at the close of life, somehow feeling that (as Tennyson expressed it)

Thou wilt not leave us in the dust;
Thou madest man, he knows not why;
He thinks he was not made to die;
And thou hast made him; thou art just.

But nowhere in nature was there written the assurance that death did not end all. In fact it was not until Christ won His victory over death that there was any real certainty that there was life beyond the grave.

Christianity is the only faith that rests upon the resurrection of its founder. Other religions point with pride to the monuments at the graves of their founders. Christianity alone presents an empty tomb. Since only God can give life and Jesus by His own power raised Himself from the dead, we have the right to the glorious claim that Christianity is the one true faith—a victorious living faith.

Resurrection truth
I. Makes the Preacher Bold (v. 16).

Barnabas and Paul had been set apart by the Holy Spirit and by the Church for missionary work, and on their first journey had reached Antioch in Pisidia. In the synagogue on the Sabbath day they were asked to speak to the people. Paul arose in holy boldness and called upon them to hearken to him. What is the important message which gives this preacher such assurance? The resurrection of Jesus Christ. It is true that the sermon he gives presents much other information as it logically and tactfully leads up to its high point, but that point is the resurrection and the redemption which it assures.

II. Makes the Gospel Clear (vv. 23-31, 38, 39).

Reviewing Israel's history, Paul declares that of the seed of David God had "according to his promise raised unto Israel a Saviour, Jesus," but that they slew Him. Now, if that were the end, we would indeed be "of all men most miserable" (I Cor. 15:19). Our hopes of salvation, with Israel's hopes, were bound up in Christ. But a dead Christ could save no one, not even Himself. We must have a living Christ. Had Paul's message stopped there it would have been a hollow mockery. But wait, what is it we read? "God raised him from the dead" (v. 30). Blessed truth! Glorious foundation for the proclamation of the gospel so aptly epitomized in the words of verses 38 and 39. Now it is clear that we have a victorious, living Saviour and a gospel to preach that is the "power of God unto salvation to everyone that believeth" (Rom. 1:16).

III. Makes the Future Certain (I Cor. 15:19-22).

Man comes to the years of maturity and suddenly faces the shocking fact that the life to which he gives so much, for which he labors and sacrifices, is but for a brief span of years, perhaps at the most "three score years and ten, and if by reason of strength they be fourscore years, yet is their strength labor and sorrow" (Ps. 90:10). He sees that friends and loved ones must part at the grave. Is this the end?

The answer to that question comes to us today from the empty tomb in the garden through the words of Paul. Listen to their majesty—rejoice in their beauty and assurance: "But now is Christ risen from the dead." Hallelujah! And that's not all. He has "become the first fruits of them that slept" (v. 20), which means that all those who are asleep in Jesus will be brought forth in due season.

The resurrection of Jesus transformed the grave (as a friend of mine expresses it) from a dark hole in the ground where hope ends, to a highway, going down, it is true, through the valley of the shadow, but lighted by the victory of Jesus over death, and bordered on both sides by Easter lilies. Thus is "brought to pass the saying that is written, Death is swallowed up in victory"—a victory that makes us "steadfast, unmovable, always abounding in the work of the Lord" (I Cor. 15:54, 58). It is Easter. Christ is risen! Let us rejoice!

God's Garden

God Almighty first planted a garden; and indeed it is the purest of human pleasures. It is the greatest refreshment to the spirits of man, without which buildings and palaces are but gross handicrafts; and a man shall ever see that, when ages grow to civility and elegance men come to build stately sooner than to garden finely, as if gardening were the greater perfection. — Francis Bacon.

HOUSEHOLD QUESTIONS

Cutting Cooking Time. — The cooking time of hominy grits, whole-grain cereals or rice can be shortened by soaking over night in water to cover.

Cleaning the Range.—Coarse sandpaper will remove any roughness from the neglected gas range.

Chill Candles. — Thoroughly chilled in the refrigerator, wax candles will burn slower and last longer.

Chilling Canned Goods.—Since paper acts as an insulator, paper wrappers should be removed from canned goods before placing the cans in the refrigerator to chill.

Paper Paddings.—Carefully arranged newspapers make good paddings under fiber rugs and matings, because the dirt which sifts through may be easily removed with the newspapers.

A Spotless Tub.—Baths can be made spotlessly clean if rubbed with a cloth dipped in paraffin before washing them in the usual way, while lemon juice and salt will take off "drip marks."

Bit of Embroidery
By Mary Ann, Nine

By RUTH WYETH SPEARS

MARY ANN was named for her grandmother, who at the age of nine, made an elaborate sampler of embroidery stitches. Everyone thought it would be nice if the modern Mary Ann could also do a bit of hand work to be framed and kept. We here report, thanks to a series of rainy afternoons, this was actually accomplished.
Mary Ann's mother started the project with a rather large piece of blue gingham; a pair of embroidery hoops and some odds and ends of bright six strand mercerized embroidery thread. Outlines for flower designs were made by drawing around coins and the flowers were embroidered as shown here. Stems were done in outline stitch and leaves in groups of straight stitches.

From the many attempts on that piece of gingham, two flower groups had almost as much life and charm as the modern Mary Ann, age nine. These were neatly framed and lend a gay note at each side of an old mirror.

NOTE: Book 1, Gifts, Novelties and Embroidery, gives full instructions for ninety embroidery stitches with many sketches showing ways to use them. You and your children may have happy hours with this fascinating hand work. Book 1, SEWING, for the Home Decorator, contains 48 complete lessons for making slipcovers, draperies, bedspreads and many other things for the house. Books are 25 cents each. If you order both books, crazypatch leaflet, reviving interest in this old-time hand craft, is included FREE. Address, Mrs. Spears, 210 S. Desplains St., Chicago, Ill.

Keeping at It

Perpetual pushing and assurance put a difficulty out of countenance, and make a seeming impossibility give way.—Jeremy Collier.

Reproach of Heart

A man's first care should be to avoid the reproaches of his own heart; his next, to escape the censures of the world.—Addison.

Watch Your Kidneys!

Help Them Cleanse the Blood of Harmful Body Waste
Your kidneys are constantly filtering waste matter from the blood stream. But kidneys sometimes lag in their work—do not act as Nature intended—fail to remove impurities that, if retained, may poison the system and upset the whole body machinery.
Symptoms may be nagging headache, persistent dizziness, attacks of drowsiness, getting up at night, swelling, puffiness under the eyes—a feeling of nervous anxiety and loss of pep and strength.
Other signs of kidney or bladder disorder may be burning, scanty or too frequent urination.
There should be no doubt that prompt treatment is wiser than neglect. Use Doan's Pills. Doan's have been winning new friends for more than forty years. They have a nation-wide reputation. Are recommended by grateful people the country over. Ask your neighbor!

FRANKFORT
Mrs. Herbert Kohlhaagen

The dedication of the new public school gymnasium in Frankfort took place last Friday evening and was largely attended. It is a very beautiful building and it is hoped that it will prove to be a worthy addition to our community.

The basketball games played on Sunday April 2 resulted in the Manhattan Independents defeating the Frankfort A. C's. The Red Heads lost to the Sectional All-Stars. There were about 450 people in attendance in the new gym.

Mrs. Bertha Nieland and daughter Mae spent Sunday in Jackson, Mich., attending the confirmation services in which Wanda, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Ray Osmus, was a member. Edw. Schaefer is seriously ill in Billings Memorial hospital in Chicago. Mrs. J. M. Clark spent several days this week in a Chicago hospital for observation.

The Confirmation services held in St. Peter's Church were well attended last Sunday, both morning and evening. The church was beautifully decorated with palms and cut flowers.

The Ladies Aid of the Methodist church held their devotional and business meeting yesterday. Mrs. Walter Carlson and Mrs. Clarence Warning were the hostesses.

The annual school election will take place this Saturday April 8 from 7 to 9 in the Public school. A director for a three year term will be elected. A member of the board of education for the non-high school district for a full term will also be elected.

Relatives and friends of Christ Bettenhausen of Tinley Park, attended his funeral on Sunday, April 2. He died very suddenly.

Max Haass underwent an operation in Silver Cross hospital for appendicitis and is convalescing very satisfactorily.

The Amite Sewing club will meet on Tuesday, April 11 in the home of Mrs. John Weitendorf.

The Epworth League of the Methodist church are sponsoring a play "The Clay is the Thing" on Friday, April 14 in the new gymnasium of the public school. Come out and sup port a good cause as well as seeing the new gym.

The Community club will meet in the home of Mrs. Fred Heusner on April 20. Mrs. Tinker will serve as program chairman.

Plan to Assist
German Refugees

A campaign to assist Catholic and Protestant German refugees, a group which outnumbers even the Jewish refugees, will be launched throughout the Chicago area Monday night, April 10 with a Thomas Mann meeting in Orchestra hall, 216 S. Michigan Ave.

Proceeds of this meeting will be used to help relieve the actual physical suffering of the hundreds of thousands of Christians forced from Germany, and to assist them in orienting themselves in new lands and occupations, according to Dr. Robert Kelsey Vervard, executive secretary of the sponsoring committee.

Dr. Vervard points out that while Jews have been giving sacrificially to care for their own and for many Christians too, Christians of this country have remained apathetic to the problem of refugees of their own religious faith.

REISH'S CLOSE SEASON

The Reish Girls closed the season with 3 victories by taking two from Midlothian and one from Oak Forest. They welcomed Charlyn Knox as a new player to their team. For the three games L. Reish started with 16 points, M. Heiting followed with 14, M. Reish with 12 and M. Doctor with 5. They are happy to say that in the two seasons that they have played, not one of the regular five have missed a game or a practice. The team finishes this season with big hopes for the next.

The Reish's of Orland lost out in the finals at Midlothian to the snappy Burnum team by a score of 50-42 in a very fast and interesting game. The Reish's jumped away to a 6-1 lead and were still leading at the end of the first quarter 9-6.

But in the second quarter the marksmanship of Burnum was very accurate while that of Reish's was not so good and at half time Burnum took the lead 25-18. The game in the second half saw Burnum take a 13 point lead which was finally whittled down to 8 points when the game ended.

For Reish's DeRuntz was hitting from all angles of the floor and scored 22 points. Uthe scored 14 points. Archer was high man for Burnum with 17 points. Blackburn collected 15 points.

Great credit is due to the ability of the officials and which were some of the best encountered during the past season.

And now the Reish's will hang up their suits for another year after having had a very busy and successful season and they wish to thank all those who constantly rooted and pulled for them and so helped them when they were ahead or behind.

The past week the last vestige of the one time Modern Woodmen hall site in Orland Park passed out of existence when the lot on which the hall formerly stood was sold to Thomas Wheeler. At one time Orland Park had a very flourishing Woodmen Camp which was consolidated with Oak Lawn Camp in 1923.

The Orland Park Fire Department was called to Palos township recently when fire caused by defective wiring broke out in the McCord farm house occupied by the Chas. Braasch family. No one was at home at the time, but the family, returning home discovered the blaze. They just had a telephone installed and thus were fortunate in being able to contact the fire department immediately. News From Springfield

By Bernice T. Van der Vries
Representative, General Assembly
7th Senatorial District.

Education

Two hearings on the subject of education were held in Springfield last week. One, a joint Senate and House Education committee meeting to discuss Senate Bill No. 65 and House Bill No. 270 convened in the House Chamber with packed galleries, corridors and every available seat taken on the floor itself; the other, a meeting of the Committee on Appropriations of the House with no quorum present and few spectators, meeting to consider House bill No. 247, which appropriated $29,400,000 to the Commonly called State Aid for non School Fund for the bi-ennium Schools.

Probably the reason for the difference in the interest in the two meetings was the fact that House Bill No. 247 in main provides that school districts having a population of less than 200,000 and having a unit district for elementary and high schools may levy without a referendum the same tax as the law now permits school districts which have separated elementary and high schools to levy.

Provokes Debates

The hearing brought out protests against the bills from tax-payers organizations and religious groups which operate their own schools. The proponents represented parent-teacher associations and school boards which believe that unit districts are being penalized for an efficiency which should result from the combination of districts as far as purchases of supplies, clerical work, etc., are concerned.

The hearing showed that more people are taking an interest in governmental taxing bodies, and in that respect was helpful. But so many in the audience desired to be heard, and the applause from the audience, particularly from the opposition which was represented not only by tax-payers, but by school children of all ages, so delayed the hearing that at 12:40 a.m. when the meeting finally was adjourned by Chairman Lotie Holman O'Neill of the House Education committee, there were present the three members of the House committee, no members of the Senate committee and possibly twenty-five persons in the audience.

Aid For High Schools

The next day the small meeting of the Appropriations committee quietly voted out with recommendations for passage a bi-ennium appropriation of $29,400,000 for State Aid for Schools. This amount is an increase of $3,400,000 over the previous bi-ennium, and most of the increase goes to the high schools which until the special session of 1938 did not receive state aid. There was very little discussion of the measure, because the increase had been written into the budget.

In considering the two educational measures which were before the hearings, I cannot refrain from commenting on the obvious fact that measures which affect local taxation produce more interest than measures which have to do with state taxation, although the funds expended by the state are contributed by the citizens in the local communities and deserve the same careful consideration.

Shy From Reapportionment

The twenty-eight year old problem of re-apportionment appears to be a very unpopular question so far as the General Assembly is concerned. Following studies made by the Legislative Council, bills were introduced early in the session for re-apportionment of the Circuit Court districts over the State. Only one bill up-to-date has made headway. Senate Bill No. 6 which transferred Whiteside county from the 14th to the 15th Circuit Court district. The bill passed the Senate by a vote of 30 to 1, received the approval of the re-apportionment committee of the House and reached second reading stage on the House calendar. On Tuesday, Representative Green of Rockford, moved to strike the enacting clause. His efforts to kill the bill failed by a vote of 74 to 25, thus permitting it to advance to third reading stage. A great deal of lobbying must have taken place overnight, for on Wednesday when the bill was called only about twenty of the seventy-four supporters of Tuesday's vote cast favorable votes for the bill. Most of the others remained silent. During the discussion of the bill, the argument was advanced that partial re-apportionment was unconstitutional. This argument has a direct bearing on proposals advanced some time ago to re-apportion Cook county Senatorial districts, leaving the remainder of the state untouched, although the Constitution specifies re-apportionment for the entire state every ten years.

There will be no session of the General Assembly Easter week.

Putting higher duties on imports from Germany makes competition with Germany in South America more difficult . . . Real battle over neutrality legislation looms in congress . . . Opposition to President's desire for power to settle our whole foreign policy is strong in congress.

WASHINGTON.—Action of the administration in putting higher duties against German products, curiously enough, makes just that much more difficult the underlying scheme for giving the Reich fierce competition in the South American markets, one important step toward which was taken during the recent visit to Washington of Oswaldo Aranha, Brazil's foreign minister.

Perhaps the best way to illustrate it is to cite the case of Rumania, prior to the present threat against her political integrity. Rumania produces wheat and oil in abundance, though not as much of either as Germany needs. Germany is eager to take these products, and has been taking them, paying in aski marks, meaning that Rumania had to take her pay in products bought inside Germany.

Why aski marks? The answer to that is the answer to many other questions involving Germany, and which will continue to be perplexing unless Germany obtains the Ukraine, some of her former colonies, and perhaps some other territory. Only when Germany is economically sufficient within herself—able to supply all her needs from her own territory—will the need for aski marks, or something to accomplish the same results, be ended.

If world trade were normal today this would not be true. Germany demonstrated, before the outbreak of the World war, that she was very efficient at selling her goods abroad. Today her workers are so underpaid and worked such long hours that she would prove an impossible competitor in manufactured goods with Britain, and of course the United States.

Many Quota Restrictions As Well as Higher Tariffs

But world trade conditions are not normal. There are all sorts of quota restrictions as well as tariff duties far beyond anything known before the World war. On top of this there has been another growing menace to German exports—the Hull reciprocal trade agreements. For example, when the United States made its trade agreement with Czechoslovakia some time back, the substantial reductions of duties therein applied to every other nation in the world except those not on the "most favored nation" list. Under the new agreements with Britain and Canada, this differential against Germany was magnified, for Germany is not on the list.

The result of this trade barrier eliminating program of Cordell Hull, therefore, has been to gradually tighten a strangling grip on Germany's economic throat. Aski marks is one of the devices to meet this threat. Germany wants coffee and cotton from Brazil. Brazil wants a number of products which Germany can supply, but which she might buy equally well from the United States or Britain. But the United States cannot increase to any extent her consumption of Brazilian coffee, and does not want any of her cotton. So aski marks force Brazil to do that particular buying in Germany.

The complication of the problem just produced by the United States action in boosting the duties on German products is that the German products which have been finding a market in the United States must obviously go elsewhere if Germany is to continue getting the imports which those particular exports have been buying. So she will be forced to redouble her efforts to force them on Latin America.

President Wants Power to Direct Our Foreign Policy

A real battle over the neutrality legislation, with both the President and the extreme isolationists wanting to amend the present law in highly conflicting ways, looms on Capitol Hill.

"Der Tag" still waits around the corner. It didn't happen this time. Ethiopia, Spain, Austria, Munich and finally the dissolution of Czechoslovakia, each made its crisis, but each passed, leaving each time a little more fear, a little more certainty, that war was coming. Each, while scaring the world to death, revives all the old issues and bitterness which were fought over when the original neutrality law was enacted two years ago—isolation versus collective security—trade versus neutrality—national pride versus international peace.

The present act satisfies none of the special groups and interests involved. A strong minority in congress feels that it gives the President too much power in leaving to his discretion the declaration of a state of war, which declaration determines whether the embargoes and other restrictions become effective, and when.

President Roosevelt maintains the present law ties his hands too closely, to pick and choose between belligerents, to embargo a commodity to one fighting nation and not to the other, to have power to determine what articles shall be classified as "war supplies." In short—power to settle our whole foreign policy.

The policy of the administration, and of the state department, since 1914 for that matter, regardless of the political label of the occupant of the White House, has been that United States interests are closely akin to those of Britain and France. The President feels keenly that this country's dangers are increased in almost direct ratio as the dangers of the two big western Europe democracies become more menacing. This is a long range view held by many Americans.

Intelligent Solution of Problem Is Not Expected

But—congress will not go along with the President on this. It will not importantly increase his discretion in neutrality administration. The little group led by Senators Bennett Champ Clark and Gerald Nye, that wants to deprive him of all discretion, will not make any gains. But neither will the larger group which believes the best interests of the country can be served only by allowing more discretion to the White House. Too many members of congress are convinced that discretionary decisions after the outbreak of a war in Europe must involve side-taking, hence may involve the United States in the conflict.

It is argued in defense of discretion for the President that a mandatory law embargoing shipments to belligerents with an even hand is anything but neutral, works gross injustice. As in Spain against the loyalists.

Anything can come out of the neutrality situation on Capitol Hill.

Washington Stag Dinners Generally Misunderstood

Few things in Washington are so generally misunderstood as some of the big stag dinners which occur at regular intervals—four of them annually, and one twice a year.

For instance the annual "wallow" of the Military Order of the Carabao. The average citizen would never have heard about these "wallows" if it had not been for William Jennings Bryan. When the Commoner was secretary of state he discovered that a line in one of the songs which the Carabao were to sing at their dinner read: "Civilize them with a Krag," meaning of course the rifle which was regular army equipment during the Philippine insurrection.

This gave the country the notion, one it still entertains when it thinks about the Carabao at all, that the members are a bunch of fire-eaters who would like to apply Japanese conquest methods in the islands. Actually the only thing on which the organization seems to be agreed is that the islands its members fought to hold should be retained indefinitely by the United States. That is not an unnatural attitude for men who have passed the prime of life, and are looking backward at the days of their youth and effort. Naturally they do not want that big experience in their lives to count for nothing, and that is the way they would feel if the United States should, as they put it, "scuttle" in the Philippines.

Actually, however, General Aguinaldo has been an honored guest at these "wallows," and so have other insurrecto leaders. More of the blue and gray spirit of Civil war reunions prevades the wallows than any thought of bitterness.

For the last 20 years not a word has been said or sung at a Carabao wallow that would not have been approved at the White House, the state department, or the lobbies of the Philippine congress. The dinners have been more like college class reunions than anything else.

Correspondents' Dinners Glorified Vaudeville Shows

The White House Correspondents' dinners have become glorified vaudeville shows, with the added eclat for visitors that the President of the United States and most of the cabinet are always present. Actually 98 per cent of the entertainment is provided by professionals, usually provided by the two big broadcasting companies on alternate years. The President merely acknowledges the friendly greeting. This year this enjoyable and relaxing event had to be cancelled because of the hotel strike, affecting all the hotels with dining rooms large enough to accommodate the number scheduled.

The National Press club dinners are but a slight modification of the White House correspondents', save that the dinners are smaller, being limited by the fact that it is held in the Press club auditorium. There is usually a little more amateur talent, but the real load of providing amusement rests on professionals.

The Gridiron dinners are utterly different in that there is no professional talent whatever except the musicians. The skits are performed by amateurs and are written by newspaper men who are members. The whole punch of a Gridiron dinner is to see the President and high officials kidded to their faces, this being one of the few countries where this would be possible.

Belgium, 'Europe in Miniature,' Is Geographical Hodge-Podge

Prepared by National Geographic Society, Washington, D. C.—WNU Service.

Belgium might well adopt as its nickname "Little Europe." One finds here, in the land's topography, crops, racial mixtures and multiplicity of industries, a laboratory model or microcosm of the western portion of the continent.

To be sure, there is no Mont Blanc, but the Ardennes hills on a white winter's day offer a satisfactory small substitute. Neither the Meuse, the Sambre, nor the Lys could masquerade as a Danube or a Rhine, but in proportion to the general architecture of the country they seem most convincing moving-waters.

The mind and eye of the sojourner subtly adapt themselves to the fact that distances and heights here are all on a scaled-down basis. The same phenomenon is often experienced at a marionette show—the observer finds himself really believing that the miniature scene is life-size.

Smaller than the state of Maryland, but with a population of more than eight million, Belgium stands out as Europe's most densely populated country. It is divided into nine provinces: West and East Flanders, Hainaut, Brabant, Antwerp, Namur, Liege, Limbourg, and Luxembourg—which must not be confused with that other Luxembourg, the little independent Grand Duchy.

Too Small for Aviators.

The longest straightaway stretch within Belgium's borders is a mere 170 miles. With seven-league boots you could cross it in eight steps. Student flyers at the military airports complain that, with the modern high-speed aircraft, they cannot get properly under way in any direction without the annoyance of zooming over a frontier and the possibility of earning a scolding from a neighboring government.

The Flanders plain is broken at Brussels into rolling hills. Nature was not content that the future capital should lie spread out on an uninspiring level. Like Rome, it was built on seven hills. There were seven founding families. And in the heyday of its walled splendor the city boasted of seven gates.

Along the top of an eminence runs the Rue Royale, Brussels' Fifth avenue, affording a sweeping view of the lower town. In order that this outlook might not be obstructed in the vicinity of the Royal palace, a regulation has long existed that at this point no building could be erected higher than the street level.

This has brought into being one of the world's unique architectural oddities, the new Palais des Beaux Arts, center of Brussels' musical and artistic life. This labyrinthine structure clings like a giant wasp to the side of the hill, all at a level below the line of the Rue Royale—a Rockefeller Center in reverse.

Many Cities in One.

Greater Brussels, with 900,000 inhabitants, comprises 15 contiguous suburbs or communes, each having its own burgomaster and municipal organization. Only recently has there been co-operation among them, though they formed in reality one city. Great was the confusion before teamwork was agreed upon.

The Ardennes district, representing almost one-fourth of Belgium's area, consists principally of richly forested ridge and valley.

The great percentage of the trees are beech, with dwarf oak running a close second. The twigs of these trees in late winter take on a pinkish-azure tint which imparts an effect of fairyland unreality to the sharply broken hill contours. Pines have been transplanted from the Scandinavian countries.

During many generations the Ardennes district sank to a point of almost negative crop production. In recent years, however, thanks to scientific chemical treatment of the soil, the fertility of the land has been enormously increased. Oats and potatoes are the principal crops.

Near Rochefort are the Grottoes of Han, which need only a P. T. Barnum to give them rank as world wonders. At some period when the earth was young, they were hol-

King Leopold and his mother, Queen Elizabeth, leave the large columned rotunda, a memorial to King Albert, funds for which came from small subscriptions to which every Belgian war veteran contributed. lowed out by the River Lesse, which here disappears and wanders underground. It is estimated that it takes the water of the river 12 hours to complete its subterranean course.

Wool Industry Centers Here.

Excellent hunting and fishing are to be had in the Ardennes. Many sportsmen who live in Brussels and Antwerp have their shooting preserves in this region. Grottoes, game, ham, horses, vacationists, and werewolf legends are not, however, the only resources of the Ardennes. The great center of the wool industry is near by in the Vesdre valley, with Verviers holding first place.

When English competition killed the Flemish cloth industry, by an anomaly of fortune the business continued to thrive around Verviers. The secret of this region's salvation was the water of the Vesdre and the Gileppe rivers. A peculiarly soft water is required for washing wool; these streams alone possessed that quality.

The last official census of production in this industry shows a total of 285 enterprises.

Additional industries represented in eastern Belgium are the paper mills of Malmédy and the chocolate factories, boot and shoe and leather-producing plants of Verviers. Leather is a patriarch among the trades; tanning pits dating from Roman times have been found here.

Europe's Busiest Man.

One of the busiest men in Europe is the port lieutenant at Antwerp—an amazing fellow, busy in four different languages at once. Never hurried or confused, he spends his day at a battery of phones receiving reports of the myriad ships and barges.

Ten thousand seagoing vessels call yearly, handling a total of twenty million tons of merchandise. In addition are 50,000 river craft.

Antwerp is the outlet for Belgium's heavy industry, its mining and agricultural products. Northern France, Alsace-Lorraine, the Rhineland, Westphalia, and Central Europe employ this gateway for a goodly percentage of their world commerce. Two hundred and forty shipping lines enter Antwerp.

Sea gulls, liting down the wind currents above the gray harbor's traffic-churned waters, mew and jeer at the torn shreds of carillon-jingle blown across from the noble Gothic tower of nearby Notre Dame cathedral.

What to Eat and Why

C. Houston Goudiss Offers Practical Help in Planning Meals That Avoid Hidden Hunger; Illustrates Right and Wrong Methods of Menu Building

By C. HOUSTON GOUDISS

A GENERATION ago, homemakers approached the problem of feeding their families with but two objectives: to put weight on their children and to send adults away from the table with their appetites appeased. If the child failed to gain satisfactorily, or if his teeth were crowded and subject to decay, he was said to "take after his Uncle Abner" or perhaps to have inherited the poor teeth of his maternal grandmother. And if adults were chronically tired or suffered from "nerves," that, too, was blamed on circumstances that had nothing to do with the diet.

No one had ever heard of hidden hunger! For nutritionists had not yet startled the world by demonstrating that food may satisfy the appetite and yet fail to feed . . . that the absence of minute amounts of minerals and vitamins may be responsible for a long train of deficiency diseases which cause untold misery and are responsible for mental and physical inefficiency.

Planning Meals Scientifically

Today we know that a definite relationship exists between food consumption and bodily activity, and that normal individuals can usually control body weight by regulating the amount of fuel foods in the diet. We know that minerals and vitamins play a powerful part in building and maintaining sound teeth as well as healthy nerves; and that we can build resistance to disease, defer old age, and even lengthen the span of life by choosing our food, not merely for its appetite appeal, but for the qualities that contribute toward what nutritionists term a balanced diet.

The Balanced Diet

Every modern homemaker therefore owes it to her family not to plan meals at random, but to take into consideration the seven factors that science has determined to be essential for top health. These include: protein for building and repairing body tissue; carbohydrates to produce quick heat and energy; fats, a more compact form of fuel; minerals, which serve both as builders, and as regulators of body processes; vitamins A, B, C, D, E and G, which act as regulars, and help to prevent the various deficiency diseases; water, which serves as a vehicle by which food is carried to the tissues, and cellulose or bulk, required for the normal functioning of the intestinal tract.

A Day's Food Plan

The various food essentials will be supplied if the three daily meals include a quart of milk for every child, a pint for each adult, which may be served as a beverage, with cereals, in soups, sauces or made into desserts; an egg daily, or at least three or four weekly; one serving of meat, fish or chicken, usually at the main meal of the day; a second protein food, such as cheese, baked beans or nuts, usually served at lunch or supper; two vegetables besides potatoes, one of which should be of the raw, leafy variety; two servings of fruit, and at least one serving of a whole grain cereal.

By adhering to this plan, you will help to supply your family with the necessary proteins, minerals, vitamins and cellulose. Fuel foods may be added by way of breadstuffs, macaroni, rice and other cereals; butter or margarine and the fats used in cooking.

Common Errors in Menu Planning are a concentration of too many proteins or carbohydrates in one meal; the failure to include adequate bulk by way of fruits, vegetables and whole grain cereals; and the massing in one meal of too many foods that are high in fat.

The following menu, for example, contains more protein than necessary, and too little bulk, yet it is typical of the dinners served in many homes: Hamburger Steak, Baked Beans, Potatoes, Stewed Corn, Custard Pie.

Since both meat and baked beans are rich in protein, they may well be served at separate meals, as indicated by either of the following combinations: Hamburger Steak, Creamed Potatoes, String Beans, Lettuce Salad, Fresh or Cooked Fruit. Or, Baked Beans, Stewed Tomatoes, Cabbage Salad, Custard Pie.

In the first menu, the beans, potatoes, corn and pastry are all high carbohydrate foods. To provide additional bulk, as well as to reduce the amount of carbohydrate, it would be advisable to serve a green vegetable such as string beans, and choose fruit instead of pie for dessert. It is assumed, of course, that eggs would be given in some other form during the day.

Since baked beans contain both protein and carbohydrate, we omit potatoes in the third menu, and serve a food rich in vitamin C—the tomatoes, and add a bulky raw vegetable by way of the salad.

It's Balance That Counts

It requires no more time or effort to prepare nutritionally correct meals than those which lack balance, nor is it more expensive. For elaborate meals can lack balance, if they are deficient in minerals, vitamins and bulk, while those composed of such simple foods as bread and milk, and stewed fruits may provide an abundance of the protective substances which satisfy the hidden hunger of the body.

My plea to homemakers is to give less thought to the preparation of elaborate recipes, and more thought to supplying the food values that will create abundant health and vitality. In that way, I believe we shall take a real step forward in human progress.

CCC at Crossroads on 6th Birthday; Alternatives: Militarization or Death

Least Criticized of All New Deal Units, Camps Have Good Record

By JOSEPH W. LABINE

Franklin Roosevelt had been President only five days before he called a select group of youth leaders into his office. By April 6, 1933—exactly six years ago—the Civilian Conservation Corps was created as one of the first New Deal agencies.

Today, as some 250,000 youths in almost 1,500 camps celebrate the sixth anniversary of their benefaction, CCC has hit rough waters. By the time congress adjourns this least criticized of all Roosevelt agencies may either be sentenced to death or changed into a semi-military army of unemployed youth.

CCC has done such a good job that strong New Deal critics like Henry Link, New York psychologist, praises it in his "Return to Religion" and "Rediscovery of Man." In six years some 2,000,000 boys have gone through its routine, one-fourth of them emerging to take permanent private jobs. Some of the rest re-enrolled.

Most Recruits Needed.

Here's how CCC works: Its membership comes almost exclusively from underprivileged homes—boys who have left school, can't get jobs and need both moral and physical training. They enroll and leave the group every three months, so there is a constant turnover. Last October, for example, 59,000 new enrollees were accepted, averaging 18.6 years of age. (They must be between 17 and 23).

CCC places these boys in camps, gives them $30 a month of which $22 must be sent home to needy parents, and teaches them not only the rudiments of hard work but a lot of "extra-curricular" activities as well. Reveille sounds at 6 a. m. Breakfast comes at 6:20 and inspection at 7:15. By 7:30 they are on the job, remaining until 4 p. m. with the exception of an hour off for lunch. From then until 10 p. m. there is time for dinner, amusements and recreation. It isn't a hard life, nor is there very strict supervision; certainly CCC enrollees aren't high well ready for active army duty, as Civilian Chief Robert Fechner would have us believe.

The lads get vocational training during evening hours. They learn crafts like photography, radio, cabinetmaking, leather work, blue printing and landscaping. But the training apparently is not very efficient because American labor unions object to having craftsmen turned out by CCC to the detriment of their apprentice system. Mr. Fechner is an old-time American Federation of Labor official.

Educational Accomplishments.

But craft or no craft, CCC does good work. Last year 8,817 illiterates learned to read and write, 3,517 finished grammar grades, 634 finished high school and 13 got college diplomas. Almost all the youths take school work, either by correspondence or from part-time residence instructors.

If CCC enrollees range from 17 to 23 and come from underprivileged homes, they rise from the very stratum of youth responsible in 1937 for 13 per cent of our murders, 28 per cent of our robberies, 42 per cent of our burglaries, 51 per cent of our auto thieves and 21 per cent of our sex criminals.

Youth camps are not a New Deal

ABOVE—Silhouettes of service, two CCC youths fighting a forest fire. RIGHT—New enrollees leaving for camp. There were 59,000 of these young men accepted last October but the current enrollment will be smaller because CCC is being forced to retrench.

invention. In 1930 California tried the scheme, doubtless getting the idea from the English "hinksey diggers" of whom Philosopher John Ruskin said their two-mile road was "the worst in three kingdoms." By 1933 work camps had existed in at least six European countries for an average of 10 years; contrary to popular belief, Germany had them long before Hitler came to power.

Set Envious Work Record.

What have they done constructively? As a sample of what CCC costs, the current fiscal year's appropriation is $350,000,000, and the nation should expect to get something tangible in return. It has. CCC has planted some 1,800,000,000 trees and built 4,000 fire towers to protect them. It has strung 75,000 miles of telephone from lookout post to watch tower. The country has 132,000 miles of new roadway and 5,000,000 dams to check erosion. There are countless new recreation centers and wild life habitat has been safeguarded to protect these innocents from the ravages of civilization.

CCC has also provided an emergency army. Its membership has done yeoman service in fighting forest fires, rescue work, flood relief and rehabilitation after disasters. The Red Cross recalls how, in the Mississippi-Ohio floods of January and February, 1937, more than 22,000 enrollees, hundreds of reserve officers and technical personnel were rushed to danger points.

Whither CCC? In his budget message last January the President recommended a slash of $120,000,000 in the corps' budget (from $350,000,000 to $230,000,000). This means camps and personnel must be reduced, camps from 1,500 to 1,200 and men from 300,000 to 250,000. This reduction is already under way and the April enrollment will be smaller than usual. Worst of all, CCC will die naturally on June 30, 1940, unless extended.

Militarized Youth Camps?

Military minded congressmen are already thinking about this, wondering if CCC can't be retained and made an integral part of our defense program. This means adoption of the plan proposed by Kentucky's Rep. Andrew Jackson May, which would provide for not less than two, nor more than five hours of military training for CCC enrollees each week. The immediate result has been a protest, not only from anti-New Dealers but from what are jokingly referred to as the "tabbies"—pacifists.

You can paint a horrible picture of this militarized CCC's potentialities, if you let your imagination run away. You can see several million unemployed youths saved from hunger and privation, who would rally 'round the banner of the man who's responsible for it. You can see a political army, if you wish, armed, trained and disciplined but feeling greater loyalty to a political clique than to the nation itself. But CCC's militarization can be safeguarded against such evils.

Dangerous? Perhaps, but maybe it's even more dangerous to contemplate American youth's fate without some agency to keep idle minds out of mischief. CCC's 1936-39 budget of $350,000,000 is far smaller than our annual national crime bill, which approximates $15,000,000,000.

Gossip Proves Boon to Nazi Propagandists

The highly efficient system that keeps Nazi Germany's hierarchy informed on public opinion is merely a magnification of over-the-fence gossip. Under Propaganda Minister Dr. Joseph Goebbels, who has followed Adolf Hitler loyally from the first, the Nazi government gets just as accurate a cross section of public opinion as the American public gets from its polls.

It is Herr Goebbels' job to weigh this opinion, find it wanting and act to remedy the situation. All told he has 2,000,000 government employees serving him daily as gossip mongers, and beyond these are the storm troopers and other organizations who consider it a sacred duty to keep higher-ups informed.

How effective the system is can be shown by the unanimity of pro-Hitler sentiment, which rose from 98.79 per cent in 1936—which Der Fuehrer occupied the Rhineland—to 99.028 per cent when he accomplished anschluss with Austria last year.

At the base of this information system is the "block" leader whose job is to care for approximately 50 German families. He preaches the Nazi gospel, tries to convert the unbelieving and makes himself family counselor. There are some 400,000 of these block leaders, who have little difficulty getting information from apartment janitors, porters, servants and "friends" of the families he observes.

Block leaders are responsible to "cell" leaders, of whom there are 70,000, each with about six blocks under his supervision. Step by step the information climbs upward until it reaches Herr Goebbels, and eventually Hitler himself.

Adding to this complex information system are 767,000 of the labor front, 50,000 political leaders, 290,000 concerned with the relief fund, 88,000 agricultural workers, 95,000 in the women's auxiliary and several miscellaneous groups.

SAFETY TALKS

Like the Chicken, We—

IT BEGINS to look as though maybe we humans are second cousins to the chickens when it comes to crossing the road.

Of 7,250 pedestrians killed during 1937 in traffic accidents that occurred in cities, says the National Safety Council, in its 1938 edition of "Accident Facts," 85 per cent were struck while crossing the road.

About 2,900 persons were injured fatally while crossing a street somewhere BETWEEN intersections. Approximately 3,260 met their death at intersections. Either they were crossing the intersection with the traffic signal, against the signal, diagonally, or were crossing an intersection at which there was no traffic signal. Deadly and tragic work at the crossroads!

Washington was the only President elected without opposition.

Split Stone With Water

An unusual sight for visitors to Egypt is the Mokattam stone quarry where slabs of stone weighing several tons each are cut without the use of metal instruments. Employing the method used by the architects of Egypt's pyramids, modern workmen insert small wooden pegs in holes cut in the stone. These are swollen with water until they split the stone along its grain in the shape desired.

Hitler Inherits Low Birth Rate In Czech Grab; U. S. Figures Up

MINNEAPOLIS.—Without bachelor taxes, marriage subsidies, or baby bonuses, the United States birth rate has climbed to 17.9 and approximate equality with Germany's birth rate, which has fallen steadily in recent years. Furthermore, Germany has now annexed the two lowest birth rates in Europe, in Austria and Czechoslovakia, probably pulling the present average for the whole German empire to a point actually below the current U. S. rate, according to a study just completed by Northwestern National Life Insurance company.

The German birth rate, in spite of that government's efforts to promote marriage and production of children, fell from 22.1 in 1921-25 to 18.8 in 1937. The 1938 figure is expected to show a further decline, reflecting the lowered marriage rate and the economic straits of the German population. The Austrian birth rate dropped from an average of 22.2 per thousand of population in the 1921-25 period, to 12.8 for the year 1937; the Czechoslovakian rate fell in the same time from 27.1 to 13.3. The birth rate in the United States declined from 22.5 in the 1921-25 period to a low of 16.5 in 1933, but recovered to 17.0 in 1937 and then jumped to 17.9 for the year of 1938, the highest figure since 1931.

The Italian birth rate, in spite of Mussolini's many edicts, declined from 29.7 in the 1921-25 period to 22.7 as of 1937, still considerably above the U. S. rate. However, 110 out of every thousand Italian babies born in 1937 died in their first year of life, approximately twice the U. S. infant mortality of 54.4 per thousand. Germany's infant mortality figure is almost as favorable as that of the United States, 64 per thousand live births, but the Czechoslovakian rate is the highest in Europe—122, and the Austrian figure is 93 deaths per thousand.

Also without legislative promotion, the U. S. marriage rate is the highest in the world, averaging in excess of 10 per thousand of population per year for the past several years. Meanwhile Germany's marriage rate had shrunk from 11.1 in 1934 to 9.1 in 1937; the Austrian rate is 6.5 per thousand, the Czechoslovakian 8.3. The Italian rate is 8.6, having climbed from 6.7 in 1935.

Of the two major European democracies, the United Kingdom shows a drop in birth rate from 20.4 for the 1921-25 period to 15.3 in 1937—which represents a halt in the decline, as the rate for 1936 was 15.3 also. France's birth rate declined from 19.3 in the 1921-25 period to 15 in 1936 and to 14.7 in 1937.

Goebbels

How effective the system is can be shown by the unanimity of pro-Hitler sentiment, which rose from 98.79 per cent in 1936—which Der Fuehrer occupied the Rhineland—to 99.028 per cent when he accomplished anschluss with Austria last year.

At the base of this information system is the "block" leader whose job is to care for approximately 50 German families. He preaches the Nazi gospel, tries to convert the unbelieving and makes himself family counselor. There are some 400,000 of these block leaders, who have little difficulty getting information from apartment janitors, porters, servants and "friends" of the families he observes.

Block leaders are responsible to "cell" leaders, of whom there are 70,000, each with about six blocks under his supervision. Step by step the information climbs upward until it reaches Herr Goebbels, and eventually Hitler himself.

Adding to this complex information system are 767,000 of the labor front, 50,000 political leaders, 290,000 concerned with the relief fund, 88,000 agricultural workers, 95,000 in the women's auxiliary and several miscellaneous groups.
